The London Literary Gazette of the 24th December asserts that Sir Walter Scott is now engaged in writing the Life of Burns, and that the work is well advanced, and that the end of next autumn. It is said to be written in a fine vein of philosophical impartiality, and breathes throughout the most perfect candour and good temper. The style is also spoken of as being carefully attended to, and a chaste example of historical excellence.

Hulton, the celebrated runner, was killed in a pugilistic combat with a Bath tinner, of the name of Henderson, after a combat of two hours, at Newham common, a short distance from Hungerford. The deceased was sensible when taken off the ground, but he died in three hours after. With a barbarous custom they have in England of punching one another to death for amusement.

An English paper says "that a most important discovery has lately been made in London, in the production of a composition metal or alloy, which equals gold in the richness of its color, and its applicability to articles of plate and ornamental purposes; it also resists the action of the atmosphere, not tarnishing or oxidizing, even when exposed out of doors to the sea. Some specimens of this metal, which is termed Mosaic Gold, have been handed about in the higher circles, and we understand that orders to an immense amount have already been received."

The last Annual Obituary of the Russian Empire, published at St. Petersburg, records the death of a man at the very advanced age of 158, near to Pulkov, on the frontier of Livonia. He had seen seven Sovereigns on the Throne of Russia, and remembered the death of Gustavus Adolphus. He had been a soldier in the thirty years war, at the battle of Poltava, in 1709, he was 51 years of age. At the age of 93 he married his third wife, with whom he lived 50 years; the two youngest sons of this marriage were 86 and 62 respectively. The entire family of this patriarch comprises 138 descendants, who all lived together in the village of Politzka, which the Empress Catharine the Second caused to be built for them, granting, at the same time, a considerable tract of land for their support. In the 163d year of his age, this modern Nestor was in the enjoyment of the most robust health.

the "Boston Herald" it shall be forwarded, with other donations on Tuesday next, until when further donations will be received from those who have taken an interest in his present afflictions. It is probable we shall publish, as soon as arrangements can be effected, an elegant collection of the best effusions of the Boston Herald, which it is presumed, will not be altogether unacceptable to the literary public, especially at the present moment, when a brief space may elapse the opportunity of paying a just tribute to the talents of this unfortunate child of genius, in the only way in which it can be of actual service to him.

The bill relative to fugitive slaves passed the house of representatives on the 16th inst. much to the surprise and regret of numerous respectable and benevolent individuals, who have given the subject their serious attention.

Among others, a petition was forwarded to the legislature from the Abolition Society of Pennsylvania, which presented arguments against the passage of the bill in its present form, of a clear, so rational, and so forcible character, as should alone, independent of the good sense and philanthropy of the members themselves, have decided the fate of the bill, and consigned it to its proper place. In the course of the remarks made by the society in their petition, it is observed,—By the act of 1790, under which they were incorporated, it is made the duty of the society to promote, among other things, the relief of increased and fully held in bondage;—they are not conscious of having done any act which would justify the legislature in rendering themselves the performance of acts which, by the bill before you, might make benevolent individuals the companions of convicts, known of a deep and obnoxious character, and the ignominious tenants of prisons. And it is possible, we ask, that a bill, with such tendencies, and at such a time as this, when the rights of science, of moral, political and religious freedom, are represented as shining forth, like the sun at noon-day, with increased and increasing richness, should not only be brought before the legislature of our state, but, it is to give the direct to the boasted improvement of the age, receive the sanction of the representatives of the great state of Pennsylvania—a state which yields to no other in the confederacy for moral worth and intelligence, which wears upon its escutcheon the proud motto of liberty, virtue, and independence? Is it possible the bill has been viewed with that cautious deliberation, which should mark the enactment of any new and unusual law? It can scarcely be believed—some undue influence must have been exerted; some unwarrantable prejudice, or partiality, or some over upon the minds of those who should be the firm, unyielding and consistent advocates of justice and truth, and be every ray to succor the oppressed, to resist encroachment and lawless usurpation from any idly every quarter, without favour or affinity; else, why the passage of this act, which, to wrench from the philanthropist the exercise of those duties which his heart esteems? The sixth section of this obnoxious bill makes it a misdemeanor for any person who shall obstruct the apprehension of a fugitive, keep, or, in other words, that individual who shall be a witness, in any way, the crying bug-bear to bondage, and banishment, being ever barbarous, the mode which a sage taskmaster may choose to adopt to bring him back to the treadmill from whence he has fled, and revivifying the chains which he was cast from him in a fit of ecstasy, in the hope of enjoying his freedom, or despair at the lengthened claim he is doomed to drag in subaltern, we say, who shall interfere in such a manner, is marked as a felon, as a criminal, and must suffer the pains and penalties which must humane law, of a most oppressive and cruel nature, have been inflicted upon him.
